WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

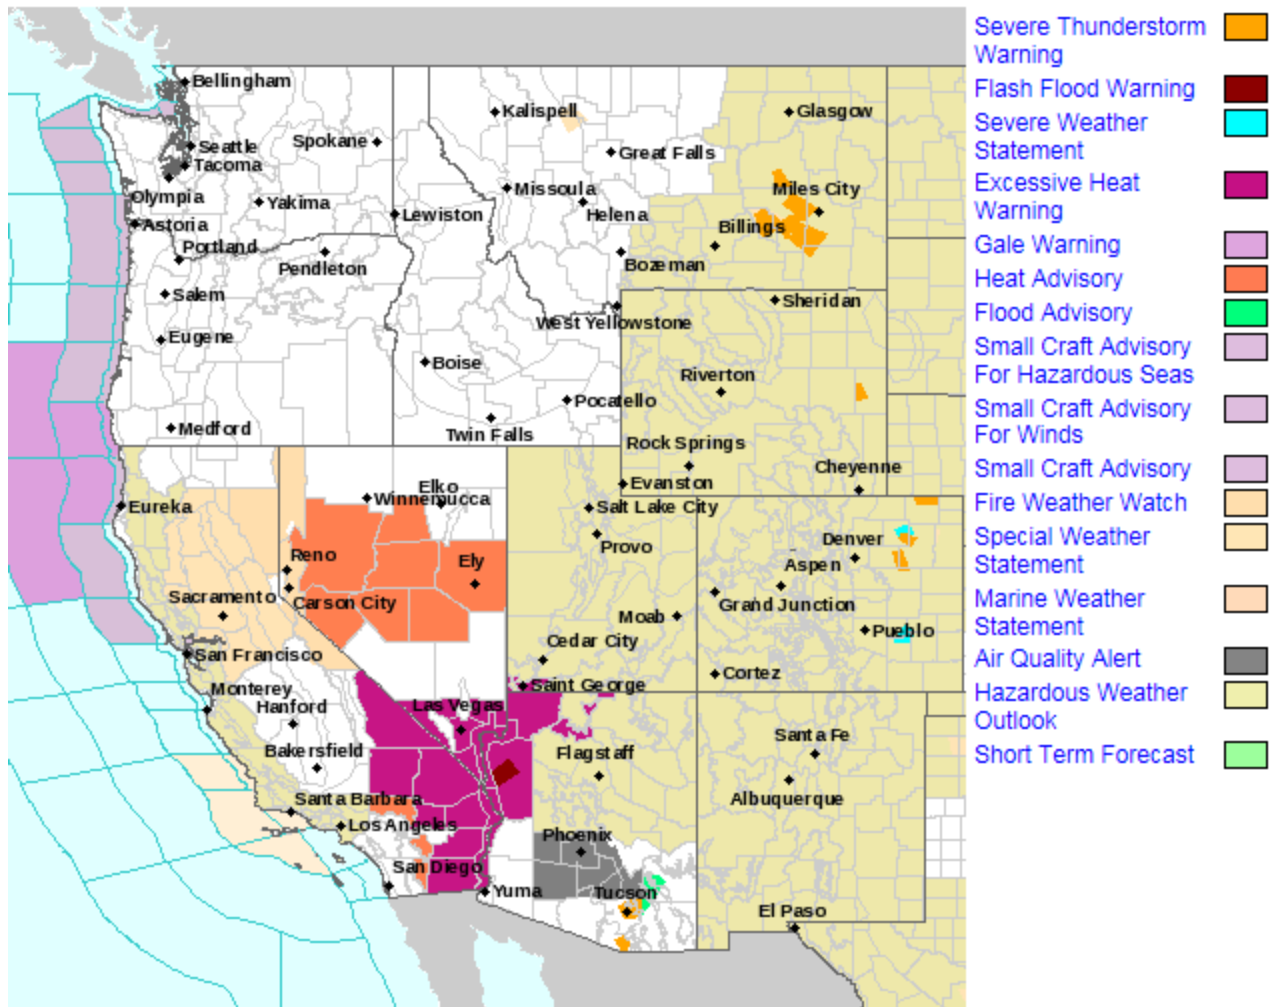

Low relative humidity (RH) and very hot, near-to-record afternoon high temperatures through Friday. High risk for isolated thunderstorms Friday and Saturday eastern/northern areas. Strong high pressure will keep its grip on the region for a few more days. The warmest inland valleys will be from 108-114 for the next few days. Low afternoon RH (8-14%) and relatively poor overnight recovery (30-45%) will continue. Many drainage bottoms and coastal areas in the marine layer are recovering to higher overnight RH values. Friday the flow around the high will become southerly, and enough Desert SW monsoon moisture is expected to come north into the Geographic Area to give us a slight chance of isolated afternoon and evening thunderstorms. Any lightning would tend to be on the dry side, although some moisture is possible. The best chances will be over the northern and eastern mountains and our Far Eastside areas with a small chance of nocturnal storms in those areas Friday night. Saturday also has potential for isolated afternoon and evening thunderstorms, but most likely just in our eastern areas. High Risk conditions are in order Friday and Saturday for the possible lightning. The high will be weaker Sunday and any chance of thunderstorms should remain south of Tahoe outside of North Ops. Cooler temperatures will set in as well starting Saturday and be quite seasonable early next week as the weak southern edge of a Pacific NW trough moves into Northern California. Afternoon highs in the warmest inland valleys will be right around 100. Overnight RH recovery will improve a little in some areas, but continue to remain about the same as now in general. The marine layer is likely to deepen somewhat early next week with more persistent cloudiness near the coast. Winds will continue to generally follow seasonable diurnal patterns. Gusty afternoon westerly winds will become possible in the far eastern areas, mainly Saturday and Monday afternoons, but speeds appear most likely to be quite seasonable (gusts locally to 30 mph for a few hours).

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

Hot and dry through Friday. Scattered thunderstorms over portions of Southern California Saturday through early next week. There will be little change in the weather through Friday as a strong high pressure area sits over Southern Nevada. Temperatures will be around 10 degrees above normal, with upper 80s and 90s across the mountains and upper 90s to 110 in the valleys. Minimum humidity will be mainly in the single digits and teens across Central California and between 15% and 25% across Southern California through Friday. The high pressure area will move slowly east bringing a gradual cooling trend and a little increase in humidity Saturday through early next week. Scattered showers and thunderstorms will form over the mountains and deserts of Southern California east and south of the I-15 Corridor as well as over the deserts bordering Nevada Saturday through early next week. Normal winds will occur each day through early next week, except there will be strong downdraft winds associated with any thunderstorm that develops.
